WHAT IS THE ACTIVE ASSISTED LIVING (AAL) PROGRAMME?

Populations around the world are ageing. The result is that there is now more pressure on healthcare systems, social services and people of a working age as older adults become increasingly dependent upon others. But now there is a growing group of businesses and researchers who believe that technology can give independence back to these people. This is what the AAL Programme, which funds ICT projects that promote active and healthy ageing, is all about.

THE AAL FORUM

The AAL Forum is the annual showcase event for people involved in or interested in the AAL Programme's projects. This year's event, which will take place in St. Gallen, Switzerland between 26-28 September, will bring together policy makers, health professionals, commissioners, carers and, of course, older adults, to come and see the latest developments in this exciting area of innovation.

WHY ATTEND?

Interactive sessions and workshops

The AAL Forum hosts numerous interactive workshops and sessions that help delegates get to grips with the latest technology, learn more about the needs of older adults, and take their businesses to the next level.

Smart Ageing Prize

For the first time ever, the AAL Forum will award the Smart Ageing Challenge Prize. A prize of €50,000 goes to the best Internet of Things innovation designed to empower older people and improve their quality of life.

Matchmaking

The forum provides an excellent opportunity to network and exchange experiences and ideas. The matchmaking platform brings together suitable potential business partners to talk about their work and strike up real collaborations.

Hackathon

The Hackathon brings together several teams of researchers, students and entrepreneurs who together invent a new solution that addresses the needs of older adults.

Poster session

Posters give authors and participants the chance to connect with each other and to engage in discussions about their latest results, ongoing research projects and innovative work in progress.

AAL2Business Solution Deployment Seminar

This seminar is an exciting opportunity to gain real insight into what market readiness for AAL solutions actually means. It also provides valuable advice on how to best develop solutions that are ready for the market.
